QUALITY METRICS

What about the low scores?

The goal of measuring the quality of our engagements is continuous improvement. In addition to our quality questionnaires at the end of each engagement, our team tracks comprehensive real-time data for each search engagement to ensure that we deliver consistent, high-quality service to everyone who crosses our path.

Lowest Average Scores

While feedback can sting a little, it's a critical pathway to improvement. Here are some of the constructive comments we received from clients and candidates:

“Scheduling in partnership with key individuals rather than directly with the search committee members would have reduced confusion given the makeup of the committee.”

“The explanation for why I was not selected could have been clearer.”

“Would have preferred some one-on-one time with key stakeholders.”

“I felt I was at a disadvantage with internal stakeholders and board members versus the internal candidate.”

How we are addressing the low scores and constructive feedback to improve:

Increased focus on communication and managing expectations. By using upfront timelines and reporting tools we aim to create clarity for all involved, especially boards and committees.

Improve candidate feedback to those who do not continue in process. Ensure all are provided with action-oriented input to help them develop as leaders.

Provide equitable candidate slates with multiple diverse leaders for every search. Offer more guidance on competency-based candidate assessment and evaluation.
